HISTORY

The PUC is driven out in 1929 of its Porte Dorée Stadium. It is only in 1937 that it is allotted a waste ground next to the Porte de Gentilly. The Sebastien Charléty Stadium, of the name of a vice-chancellor who worked much for obtaining this stadium for the PUC, is inaugurated in 1939. During the war, work continues. This place is also the first one of Paris to be liberated by a detachment of the 2nd Armoured Division commanded by Field Marshall Leclerc. Works continued: wooden steps appeared then cloakrooms and finally a Club-house. Charléty welcomes its first great sporting event in September 1957 with the university Games of Paris. The runner Michel Jazy beat the world record there on 2,000 meters in 1962. In 1968, a nonsporting event takes place there. On May 27, the meeting of the national Union of the students of France, the most outstanding meeting of the events of May 68, proceeds there. From 30,000 to 50,000 people are gathered there. The stadium continues to welcome amateur and professional sporting events, as well as different sport sections from the PUC. Then in 1980, after a record of France by Marajo on 1,000 m, the pucist Philippe Houvion beat the world record of pole jump with 5.77meters

Becoming dangerous, it is demolished at the end of the year 1989. A new stadium is built since 1991 for 120 million Euros, then inaugurated in 1994 (architects: Henri and Bruno Gaudin).

The new Charléty Stadium hosts within its Charpy room the Paris Volley club, originating from the volley ball section of the PUC, and several times champions of France. It welcomes in 1999, the European Nations Cup of athletics. The athletics meeting of Paris of the Golden league takes place there also several times, as in 2002 when American Tim Montgomery there beat the world record of the 100 m (9 seconds 78) but which is now controversial due to the polemic of the "record of the world" program initiated by Victor Conte, founder of the Balco laboratory. In 2002 and 2003 this stadium has hosted CAMP MASTER' S, a competition of international Paintball. French Paintball entered a major stadium for the first time. This stadium was used during the World cup of football 2006 in Germany: French fans had the occasion to see on a giant screen the 7 matches of the French team, which gathered several times more than 10,000 people. Others matches were broadcast there, like Brazil vs Australia or Portugal vs England.

The Paris University Club (PUC) is the largest university sports Club in France with 10,000 members and more than 60 sports from amateur practice to competition level.
